Population Dynamics of Montane Invertebrates and Birds
Jason Hill

VERMONT CENTER FOR ECOSTUDIES
Uniting People and Science for Conservation

C. Debar
High-resolution tide projections reveal extinction threshold in response to sea-level rise

Christopher R. Field, Trina S. Bayard, Carina Gjerdrum, Jason M. Hill, Susan Meiman, Chris S. Elphick

Photos: Karsten Moran for The New York Times
Mountain Birdwatch

Yellow-bellied Flycatcher
Bicknell’s Thrush
Swainson’s Thrush
Winter Wren
Blackpoll Warbler
White-throated Sparrow

Hermit Thrush
Boreal Chickadee
Black-capped Chickadee
Fox Sparrow
Red Squirrel

n = 42
MountainBirdwatch.org: Hike mountains, count birds, be merry.

Reach me at jhill@vtecostudies.org

Thank you to all the Mountain Birdwatchers (especially Lu Ann Laquerre, Beagle Bourgault, Jeff Green, & Jason Crooks), Abbie Castriotta, Kitt Langdell, Madison Sayers, Latrice Hodges, Lisa Wright, Vermont Agency of Natural Resources | Department of Forests, Parks & Recreation, Jon Kart, Brendan Clifford, New Hampshire Fish and Game, Leighlan Prout, Brett Hillman, White Mountain NF, Mansfield State Forest, University of Vermont Real Estate Operations, Nancy Mathews, Amy Seidl, Cheryl Sullivan, Allan Strong, Kent McFarland

Mountain Birdwatch is conducted entirely within unceded territories of the Munsee Lenape and nations of the Haudenosaunee and Wabanaki Confederacies. Sampling locations are located within the homeland of the Abenaki, Pequawket, Arosaguntacook, Nanantsouak, and Penobscot Nations of the Wabanaki Confederacy and within that of the Kanien’kehá:ka Nation of the Haudenosaunee Confederacy.